Mount Shasta

Mount Shasta, standing at 14,179 feet, is in Siskiyou County, California, and is notable for being the second-highest peak in the Cascade Range and the most voluminous volcano in the Cascade Volcanic Arc. The area attracts around 26,000 visitors annually who often become enamored with the region, highlighting its natural beauty and the allure of the Shasta–Trinity National Forest that surrounds it.

The energies of the mountain are known to call seekers, and within the spiritual community it holds a great significance and is known as the “Root” or “7th Chakra” of the World. History is steeped in folklore such as the legend of Telos beneath Mount Shasta captures the imagination with its tales of the Lemurians, descendants of the mythical lost continent of Lemuria, who are said to have survived a catastrophic fate and established a hidden city. Descriptions of these supposed Lemurian inhabitants include striking features such as towering heights, long hair, and ethereal clothing, lending an air of mystique to the region.
